

Silk Hankies are a product that only recently came into the mind of embroiderers all over the world. A Hankie is made of one silk-cocoon: a cooked cocoon is carefully opened at one end and then stretched over the hand into a square. Many layers are put together but can easily be separated again. Suitable for extremely thin paper with an interesting structure made by the thicker edge of the hanky. It can be easily spun by hand to make a knobbly embroidery thread that looks great with woven stitches. They can be needle-felted by hand or machine which lets the Painters colours come out to look their best.
